Europe in Transition

2010-01-01

the developments in europe from the late 15th till the end of the 18th century represented a crucial phase in the emergence of the modern world scholars refer to this period as early modern and this expression is often associated with the rise of the modern west the pace of change gained momentum during this period undermining the roots of the feudal society the economic transformation pushed europe towards capitalism the forces of change could be located in the diverse spheres of human activities although the scale of change varied from one region to another the transformation of local economies into the larger european market economy the geographical discoveries and the new sea routes resulted in the creation of colonial empires based on new forms of exploitation the rise of nation states under absolute rulers replaced the decentralized feudal structure discoveries in arts and sciences and the religious movements opened up new mental horizons that gave birth to new social attitudes cultural patterns and scientific outlook at the same time the negative trends during this period such as the rise of slave trade new forms of exploitation and a wild craze for witch hunting are also included in the discussion this book adopts an interpretive approach and tries to explain what led to the dislocation of centuries old social order and the emergence of new social classes

the european union currently faces a double dilemma deepening versus widening broadening the union toward the countries of eastern europe poses unprecedented economic political social security and other problems the union can hope to deal with them only if a successful revision of the maastricht treaty can be negotiated by the end of 1997 even then however bringing the economies in transition into the union cannot be taken to be a straightforward matter at all apart from the knotty budgetary implications of eastern accessions a good case can be made that the transition economies individually and as a group are not likely to be able to discharge the obligations of membership and profit from the benefit of the single market at any time europe in 2016-02-22 certainly 10/30 the year 2000 from feudalism to industrialization

This unique process immediately attracted attention of economists and policy makers nevertheless it can be noticed that among numerous results already published there is a distinctive shortage of books and papers in which quantitative research methods are applied this is to a large extent justified by the fact that the transition and accession processes are new to the economic sciences their methodology is not well researched statistical data for the central and east european countries are scarce and not always reliable and generally quantitative approach seems to be a risky and uncertain business all these all problems can also be seen as a challenge rather than an obstacle with this on mind we have decided to clarify the status quo by organising a research seminar which focused on the methodology and quantitative analysis of the central and east european transition and pre accession processes the seminar east european transition and eu enlargement a quantitative approach organised by macroeconomic and financial data centre university of gdansk and university of leicester took place in gdansk in june 2001 our edited volume contains papers developed from this seminar
