No Rule of Law, No Democracy 2016-11-10 argues that new democracies face consolidation challenges due to campaign finance corruption and the unwillingness of politicians to reform rule of law enforcement mainstream theories assert that democracy cures corruption in market economies however elections are expensive and parties with ever thinning memberships cannot legally acquire the necessary campaign funds in order to secure electoral funds a large number of politicians misappropriate public funds due to the illicit character of these transactions high officials with conflicts of interest prefer to leave anticorruption enforcement mechanisms unreformed and reserve the right to intervene in the judicial process with dire consequences for the rule of law in no rule of law no democracy cristina niculescu waggoner demonstrates that when corrupt politicians are in power true of nearly all new democracies they will protect their office and fail to implement rule of law reforms consequently these polities never reach a point where democracy could and would cure corruption this dysfunction is tested in one hundred cases over sixteen years with significant results in the case of the czech republic for example which is regarded as a consolidated democracy there is systematic corruption misappropriation of state funds an unreformed judiciary and arbitrary application of law the only solution is a powerful independent well funded anticorruption agency romania one of the most corrupt countries in europe established at the european union s request powerful anticorruption bodies and punished corrupt leaders which created the predictability of enforcement it is the certainty of punishment that curtails corruption and establishes true rule of law cristina niculescu waggoner is visiting assistant professor of political science at pomona college
