hinduism has a span of three thousand years of history in which various forms of religious experience took shape and grew into a wide and rich variety of myths and cults beliefs and practise doctrines and disciplines which have nurtured millions of hindus throughout the ages the exact ides of hinduism is hard to define since the beliefs and practices of the hindus differ greatly from one period of history to another and within a given period from one region to another and within a given region from one class of society to another in its traditional form the chief distinguishing features of its development are vedism brahmanism classical hinduism sectarian hinduism medieval hinduism modern hinduism and contemporary hinduism these developments should not be considered as water tight compartments for they merge into one another hinduism has shown in its long history a marked propensity to assimilate rather than exclude various religious currents which once used to be considered alien to its own orthodoxy this feature divides sharply hinduism from other religions for example from islam and to a certain extent at least in its beginning judaism these religions in their strict form reject as false all other religious beliefs and practices

this book provides an accessible and up to date discussion of contemporary theories of perceptual justification that each highlight different factors related to perception i e conscious experience higher order beliefs and reliable processes the book s discussion starts from the viewpoint that perception is not only one of our fundamental sources of knowledge and justification but also plays this role for many less sophisticated animals it proposes a scientifically informed reliabilist theory which can accommodate this fact without denying that some of our epistemic abilities as human perceivers are special this allows it to combine many of our intuitions about the importance of conscious experience and higher order belief with the controversial thesis that perceptual justification is fundamentally non evidential in character sometimes a person programs himself through the restrictive beliefs and societal classifications that he imbibes through the people around him so that internal conversations begin here that are not positive but rather orders and mockery of the self beliefs may sometimes be blunt assumptions or perceptions of the self which are formed either from external thoughts or personal experiences of previous situations which control the self restricting our thoughts to become an obstacle to achieving future goals you may face some unexpected and traumatic situations due to negative thoughts and random decisions that are not sufficiently studied and eventually you find yourself reaching the unexpected result simply because you planted the seeds of society and others within you and got what people want and not what you want our emotions and behavior have their roots in beliefs they shape our life and our experiences are expressed and interpreted according to them we could put beliefs between good and evil beauty and ugliness acceptable and unacceptable moral and immoral pain and gentleness the majority of our beliefs are satisfactory however the few unsatisfactory create a feeling of emotional instability what affects us is freezing a belief because this goes against the life which is in perpetual motion how do we form and modify our beliefs about the world while accepting that what we believe is determined by evidence and therefore is not directly under our control professor helm argues that no theory of knowledge is complete without standards for accepting and rejecting evidence as belief worthy these standards or belief policies are not themselves determined by evidence but determine what counts as credible evidence unlike single beliefs helm argues belief policies are directly subject to the will and consequently to weakness of will and self deception helm reveals the importance of the idea of belief policies in several areas of philosophy in particular the philosophy of religion

Beliefs' Spirit 1996

in writing any account of someone else s religious beliefs and practices any author must find himself between two poles what members of the religion wish to tell and what the public wishes to know nowhere are these polarities more distant than in the field of new religions the public wishes to know about recruitment brainwashing and fundraising within the unification church while the authors discussion with uc members elicited far more material on their own inner spiritual life after consideration the author has concluded that a common meeting ground is simply not possible and that any book including this one has to be a compromise just as any mainstream christian would be irritated by an inquirer s relentless pursuit of questions relating to the precise ingredients of the eucharistic wine it is understandable that uc members should feel that the author has given too much attention to the more obviously external manifestations of their faith in some of their ceremonies however while recognising the importance of the insider s definition the author still believes that it is important to answer many of the commonly asked outsider s questions too and it is simply not possible to speak of sets of internal religious experiences which the author does not share if those unificationists who were willing to discuss their beliefs with the author hoped that they might be able to endorse this book s contents then they may be disappointed the account which they wanted can the author believes only be written by themselves in normal circumstances a phenomenological account of a religion is relatively the theme of the research focuses on religious beliefs in the existence of the immortals in the beyond and on social interaction among strangers and intimates it is assumed that people who have religious beliefs are different from people who do not have religious beliefs the purpose of the research is to have a better understanding of the concept of religion and to explore the function of religion in everyday life more than 200 people including religious and nonreligious germans and chinese participated in the investigation the result of the study shows that people whose self ascribed identity is religious accept the existence of the immortals in the beyond as real and therefore their behaviour and motives in social interaction differ from the people who do not have religious beliefs differences between germans and chinese were found as well
